Cognitive Bias and the Better-than-average Effect Jan 06 2022 Supplementing one's pre-existing knowledge by accessing information (e.g., answers to tests) is quite common and subsequently inflates a participant's estimate of their internal knowledge (Fisher et al., 2015). The purpose of this research is to examine whether access to answers promotes the Better-Than-Average Effect, or BTAE (Alicke, 1985). The BTAE describes a person's tendency to rate themselves as above average on various highly desirable traits and characteristics; this is one form of self-enhancement by which people maintain positive views of the self (Leary, 2007). While access to information has been found to inflate a participant's estimate of their internal knowledge, the present research extends these findings by examining whether such answer-access impacts how participants perceive their level of knowledge – and performance – as it compares to others. Experiment 1 hypothesized that compared to participants without access to answers (i.e., from Google), participants using the Internet to complete a trivia task would rate themselves as more knowledgeable than either an individual ostensible participant or an "average college student" and, in turn, cause an overestimation of performance without Internet use. A follow-up experiment (Experiment 2) explored whether access to answers during completion of a vocabulary quiz inflates estimates of internal knowledge and in turn stimulates an overestimation of one's performance on a hypothetical subsequent task; it also looked to extend Better-Than-Average Effect research (Alicke, 1985) by exploring whether access to answers inflates social comparison ratings on nine highly desirable traits and characteristics that were significant or marginally significant in the first experiment.

Copyright Questions and Answers for Information Professionals Dec 17 2022 Copyright law is a critical issue for authors, librarians, publishers, and information vendors. It is also a complex area, with many shades of gray. Librarians continually need to seek answers to questions ranging from the reproduction of copyrighted works for library users, through the performance of audiovisual works, to the digitization and display of protected works on library websites. This book presents updated versions of the author's copyright columns published in Against the Grain, the leading journal in acquisitions librarianship since the late 1990s. It is the first volume in the series Charleston Insights in Library, Archival, and Information Sciences. The aim of the Charleston Insights series is to focus on important topics in library and information science, presenting the issues in a relatively jargon-free way that is accessible to all types of information professionals, including librarians, publishers, and vendors, and this goal shapes the pragmatic and accessible tone of the book. The volume is presented in question-and-answer format. The questions are real, submitted by librarians, educators, and other information professionals who have attended the author's copyright law workshops and presentations or submitted them to her by e-mail or telephone. The author has selected the questions and answers that have general applicability. She has then arranged them into logical chapters, each prefaced by a short introduction to the topic. Because it is written in an accessible and clear style, readers may want to review the entire work or they can just access particular chapters or even specific questions as they need them. The volume includes an index to facilitate reference use.
